Suspended-Sediment Concentrations during Dam Decommissioning in the Elwha River, Washington, September 2011–February 2013

By Christopher A. Curran, Christopher S. Magirl, and Jeffrey J. Duda

Introduction

In 2011, the National Park Service commenced the incremental removal of two century-old dams along the Elwha River, Washington, in order to restore ecological and sediment-delivery processes (U.S. Department of the Interior, 1996; Duda and others, 2008, 2011; Curran and others, 2009). Elwha Dam (32-m high; 8 km from the Strait of Juan de Fuca) was completed in 1913, and Glines Canyon Dam (64-m high; 22 km from the Strait of Juan de Fuca) was completed in 1927 (fig. 1). Elwha Dam formed Lake Aldwell and Glines Canyon Dam formed Lake Mills. During the decommissioning period, each dam was notched from the top down in progressive steps to allow a metered release of sediment to downstream river reaches (Randle and others, 1996; Randle and Bountry, 2010; Czuba and others, 2011). Throughout the project, decommissioning was periodically ceased (termed “deconstruction hold periods”) to reduce effects of increased sediment concentration on migrating fish or to accomplish sediment-transport management targets (U.S. Department of the Interior, 1996; Czuba and others, 2011). Dam decommissioning started in September 2011 with both dams. Elwha Dam was completely removed by April 2012, which permitted unregulated release of sediment trapped in Lake Aldwell. Lake Mills Reservoir ceased to exist in autumn 2012 as the prograding delta of sediment in the reservoir finally abutted the lowered Glines Canyon Dam structure.

In cooperation with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the National Park Service, the U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) was asked to measure turbidity and calculate suspended-sediment concentrations in the lower Elwha River during the dam-decommissioning and river-restoration project. During the project, USGS operated a turbidity sensor at a water-quality monitoring station in the lower Elwha River (fig. 1), which collected data at 15-min increments. The USGS also collected suspended-sediment samples from the lower Elwha River about 380 m downstream of the monitoring station. A relation between turbidity and suspended-sediment concentrations, consistent with established USGS protocols (Rasmussen and others, 2009), was established to enable reporting of suspended-sediment concentrations in the lower Elwha River.

This document contains calculations of total suspended-sediment concentrations and concentrations of suspended-sediment fines (particle sizes less than 0.0625 mm) in the lower Elwha River downstream of the dam decommissioning project from September 2011 to February 2013. A time-series record of suspended-sediment concentrations is reported using continuous turbidity data as a surrogate for suspended-sediment concentrations.

Computation of Suspended-Sediment Concentration Time Series Record

Fluvial sediment data were collected from the lower Elwha River over a range of flows and turbidity values about 380 m downstream of the Elwha River at Diversion, near Port Angeles (USGS station No. 12046260, fig. 1). Suspended-sediment samples were collected using the equal-width-increment (EWI) method (Edwards and Glysson, 1999). Suspended-sediment samples were collected using various depth-integrated samplers approved by the Federal Interagency Sedimentation Project (FISP) and routinely used by USGS personnel (Davis, 2005). Most sediment samples were analyzed at the USGS sediment laboratory at the Cascades Volcano Observatory in Vancouver, Washington, to determine the total sediment concentration and percentage of fine-grained particles (less than 0.0625 mm). Two samples were analyzed at the USGS-certified GMA Hydrology fine-sediment laboratory in Placerville, California. All suspended-sediment data collected for the Elwha River are available through the National Water Information System (NWIS), http://waterdata.usgs.gov/wa/nwis/nwisman/?site_no=12046260&agency_cd=USGS).

Turbidity was continuously monitored from September 15, 2011, to February 28, 2013, with the exception of intermittent periods when instrument failure or excessive sedimentation or fouling occurred. Turbidity was measured using a DTS-12 nephelometric turbidity sensor (Forest Technology Systems Ltd., 2012) enclosed within a protective pipe. This mounting arrangement allowed turbidity measurements in an actively flowing part of the river channel and decreased the likelihood of debris build-up around the sensor face or on the mounting hardware. Turbidity data were recorded at 15-min intervals and transmitted hourly by satellite from the water-quality monitoring station to the USGS Automated Data Processing System and are available at:

http://waterdata.usgs.gov/wa/nwis/uv/?site_no=12046260&PARAMeter_cd=00060,00065. The operational range of the DTS-12 sensor reported by the manufacturer is 0–1,500 FNU (Forest Technology Systems Ltd., 2012), however, based on comparisons with turbidity standards and other hand-held turbidity sensors in sediment-laden conditions in the Elwha River (Wagner, 2006), precision of the DTS-12 was diminished for turbidity values greater than 1,200 FNU. For this reason, when river turbidity values exceeded 1,200 FNU, turbidity values were reported as “>1,200 FNU” and corresponding computed values of suspended-sediment concentration were reported as “>5,700 mg/L.” USGS protocols for the operation and maintenance of continuous water-quality instruments were followed as outlined by Wagner and others (2006), and the time-series data were processed and reviewed according to established USGS policy for continuous water-quality data. All turbidity data collected for the Elwha River are available through NWIS.

Standard USGS guidelines were followed for using turbidity as a surrogate measurement for suspended-sediment concentration (Rasmussen and others, 2009). Regression equations were developed for computing the concentration of total suspended sediment and the fraction of fine-grained (less than 0.0625 mm) suspended sediment based on measured suspended-sediment concentrations and concurrently measured turbidity. The least-squares regression model was selected based on analysis of diagnostic statistics and model residuals consistent with the procedures outlined in Rasmussen and others (2009). Upper and lower confidence intervals for the regression model, as well as upper and lower prediction intervals that show uncertainty of individual estimates of suspended-sediment concentrations were determined at the 90-percent level. A time-series record of suspended-sediment concentrations was computed by applying the appropriate regression equation using 15-min turbidity time-series data from September 15, 2011, to February 28, 2013. This reporting period brackets the dates when operational turbidity sensors were exchanged with replacement calibrated sensors and checked against standards following USGS protocol, thus ensuring integrity of the turbidity data (Wagner and others, 2006).

The regression model that demonstrated the best normal distribution of residuals and associated homoscedasticity (Helsel and Hirsch, 1992) required a cube-root transformation of the suspended-sediment concentration. However, converting the cube-root regression model back into arithmetic space resulted in a bias (Helsel and Hirsch, 1992). To correct for the bias, a nonparametric “smearing” correction was used when transforming the estimates of suspended-sediment concentration and 90-percent prediction intervals back into arithmetic space (Duan, 1983).

Suspended-Sediment Concentrations in the Lower River

Measured suspended-sediment concentrations correlated best with turbidity when transformed using a cube-root model (fig. 2). The fine-grained portion (<0.0625 mm) of measured concentration was better correlated with turbidity than the total concentration. Twenty suspended-sediment samples (appendix A) were used to generate the regression model with total concentration ranging from 7 to 11,600 mg/L and a median concentration of 568 mg/L (table 1). The cube-root regression was then applied to the time series record of 15-min turbidity values from September 15, 2011, to February 28, 2013. The computed suspended-sediment concentration of time-series data ranged from 54 to $>5,700$ mg/L and the portion of fine-grained sediment concentrations ranged from 53 to $>2,770$ mg/L (table 1). Uncertainty in predicted suspended-sediment concentration, reported as 90-percent prediction intervals, was significant and ranged from 0 to 411 mg/L when the turbidity was 2 FNU (total suspended-sediment concentration of 54 mg/L), from 803 to 4,290 mg/L when the turbidity was 800 FNU (total suspended-sediment concentration of 2,230 mg/L), and from 2,810 to 9,290 mg/L when the turbidity was 1,200 FNU (total suspended-sediment concentration of 5,700 mg/L). All suspended-sediment concentration values and uncertainties, for both total and fine-grained portion, were calculated for each available 15-min. turbidity measurement and are available in appendix B.

Total suspended-sediment concentrations in the lower Elwha River were tabulated into concentration bins, which were summarized by proportion of time per week (fig. 3). There were a total of 78 weeks in the record, with 74 weeks containing 7 days (the other 4 weeks were less than 7 days due to day of the week equipment was deployed/removed and calendar artifacts). Data collection was interrupted during 8 weeks, with the number of 15-min intervals collected during these weeks averaging 665.6 (range 651–669) of a possible 672 15-min turbidity samples per week. From the start of the river-restoration project until Elwha Dam was completely removed in April 2012, suspended-sediment concentrations in the lower Elwha River generally remained less than 500 mg/L (fig. 3). High flows and increased available sediment from reservoir drawdown in spring of 2012 created hydraulic conditions whereby suspended-sediment concentrations periodically exceeded 500 mg/L. Suspended-sediment concentrations generally were less than 500 mg/L in the summer and early autumn of 2012, then commonly increased to greater than 500 mg/L during high flows in the late autumn and winter of 2012–13 (fig. 3).

Appendix B. Turbidity and Suspended Sediment Concentration Time Series during Dam Decommissioning in the Elwha River, Washington

The 15-minute time-series record of turbidity and corresponding suspended-sediment concentration as computed by a regression model, are presented for the water-quality monitoring site Elwha River at Diversion, near Port Angeles, Washington (USGS station No. 12046260) from September 15, 2011, to February 28, 2013. For each turbidity value, the concentration of fine suspended-sediment (particle size less than 0.0625 mm) also is presented as determined by regression and the associated uncertainty for each concentration value. Uncertainty is expressed as an upper and lower concentration representing, with 90-percent confidence, the range of expected concentration for a given turbidity value.
